NEUFELD INSTITUTE NEWS

SEPTEMBER 2010

We are pleased to announce the launching of our online education program featuring Dr. Neufeld and the faculty of the Neufeld Institute as presenters. It is our hope that by using today's internet technology, we can provide more access to this approach.

We are using our state-of-the-art videoconferencing system for these online events. Participants will be able to see the presenter as well as the powerpoint slides and will also be able to ask questions in live time through typing in their comments.

We have scheduled a variety of offerings this Fall with Dr. Neufeld starting us off on September 9th with a presentation on Resilience. This talk received rave reviews at the May 2010 Neufeld Parent Conference in Vancouver. For a complete list of online offerings, please go to online offerings on our new Neufeld Institute website. Clicking on each presenter's photo will take you to their profile in the our people section of the website.

Although we anticipate that parents will make up most of our audience, the presentations are applicable to all who are involved with children: educators, day-care providers, counselors, therapists, grandparents, youth workers, pediatricians, and more.

We do hope these online offerings will engage, and more importantly, will help provide adults with the insight necessary to become more effective in their interaction with their charges. We will be eager for your feedback.

We have listed here, for your convenience, the five online events offered this Fall. For a description of these presentations, please go to online offerings on our website.
